

coquecigrues*

 The French author Rabelais invented this feminine noun in 1532.
It's about an imaginary animal.
In the figurative sense and burlesque use it means 'nonsense'.*

4 lost creatures in the streets

They are joyful, merry and weird.
They move too much to be held back.
They are too talkative to not interfere in any situation and too absent-minded to be able to think wisely.

These chatterboxes are charming walking disasters.
Be careful of their uncontrolled behaviour !

concretely

Four actors wearing inflatable costumes and jumping shoes use an amplified sound-system device which distorts voices into cartoon voices.

They blend in with the crowd, snoop around, do what they want and sometimes make little blunders.

They improvise hazardous choreography, talk using an unknown language and often laugh stupidly.

At every street-corner they enjoy singing weird and off-the-wall songs.

It is a rapid, light, entertaining show in connivance with the crowd.
