

coruscants*

\ from the Latin verb coruscare meaning to shine, to sparkle.*

Weary of waiting for you in museums or other big international exhibitions, the Coruscant have decided to stroll about the streets to meet you.

During their cheerful and casual walks, these long-distance-wandering horned creatures love to share some songs and dances their mahouts collected during previous trips.

They are both fine art and brass band lovers and they can suddenly rush into your streets from Nonsense avenue to Little Treats alleyway.

concretely

A dazzling trio of actors are equipped with a sound-system device and wear amazing inflatable sculpture-puppet costumes.

As periscopic observers, they are able to detect the beauty we cannot see, in a row of streetlights just as well as behind a stand of French fries.

They can also, simply, accompany those little moments of happiness that punctuate our celebrations.

Every meeting along their way is an opportunity for them to go adrift.

Their show comes with original and heterogeneous live music.

So-called tribal songs, allegedly contemporary choreographies, approximate and interactive feats, give rhythm to this amazing performance.
